Notes

p. 138 "Bosozoku Revolution Picolet"

In Japanese, it's possible to spell a word one way and have it pronounced another way. Or to even make up a word and have it read as a real word with furigana. Furigana tells you how to read the kanji.
It's not something done in English, so it can be confusing when translating.

In this case, "Picolet" is not a real word. The kanji used to spell it are "Injustice", "Old", "Extreme" and "Big Dipper". They make no sense together in real life. However, in real life, Picolet is a brand of air-freshener for the bathroom.

p. 147 "Senior"

"Senior" is how I translate the Japanese word 'sempai', which is an honorific used for someone older than you, someone who joined a club or company before you, etc.

It's also more formal than using someone's first name, so it's a slight step backwards for Gonda.
